

Discussion Website User Guide 11/18/2024 AEM

On this website you can create a new topic for discussion and you can add to the discussion of an existing topic. Topics are identified by an index number with a topic heading associated with the index number. You can identify your participation with a Username or ID if desired, this is optional. Leaving the Username blank will be identified as “anon” (anonymous).

Unless abuse prevails there is no need to login and have a password. So please keep the language civil, else I will have to create a need for user names and passwords.

There are two sections to the website.

1. Topic Text (Read Only – No Edit Allowed)
2. Topic Opinion (You Enter Your Post Here)

Topic Selected:

This section is read only and contains either all topic entries or if a specific topic is selected all entries for that selected topic.

Topic Opinion

This is where you enter your text to be posted. You can enter a new topic or comment on a selected topic with your opinion.

Displaying and Selecting Topics

Index: Username: Title: Index List

```
Index#1008 Title:Orange Man

FEMA told its workers not to help Trump Voters with Trump signs in their yards.
Index#1006 Title:Senate Majority Leader

When you first enter the website the word “ALL” is in the Index box and all topics are displayed with the last topic on top (first) . The Username and Title boxes are blank. Use the scroll bar to view the various topics. Each topic you view will show the index number, the title, the date the topic was created, the username, and the topic text.

To select a specific topic you replace “ALL” with the index number of the topic. The index number for the last topic in the example above is 1008. Replace “ALL” with 1008 and click the “Get” button.

Website Issues

I have no formal training and little experience developing websites.

I used vb.net in Visual Studio 2005.

Any suggestion and help will be appreciated.

I cannot figure out how to do the following:

Display this pdf user guide on a new tab in the same browser instead of in a new browser.

How to close a browser in vb.net code.

How to scroll down the page to a specified object

How to return to a page without losing previous data entries on that page

How to add a link in the middle of text in a text box
